Thought you both might be interested in this email...start from the bottom and work your way up. Does WA send other states reports to cancel voters who have moved out of state? I intend to follow-up with this former Stranger reporter and email her a cancellation form, as well.

John,

Thanks for checking!

Say, do you have in your system a phone number or email for Amy? I'd like to give her a call and follow-up with a voter cancellation form.

Uh, she did provide the former address information and we did not let you know. Thanks to your question, I now know that our new state-wide system provides a way to capture the other state data and our secretary of state will produce regular reports to send to other states. Multnomah County has NEVER passed on the information to other states! My previous county did not either!

John,

Any chance you can look in to this and let me know if Amy Jenniges completed her reg form correctly? I'm wondering why we were not notified of her move, if she says is true.

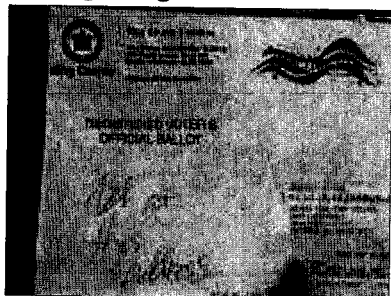

Thanks, John. Hope all is well for you in Oregon.

Cheers,

Bobbie

Mail Ballot Horror Show(XII): Ballots keep getting forwarded to former residents who are no longer eligible to vote

Portland resident Amy Jenniges of The Stranger, shares this mail ballot horror story despite moving out of King County last November, and registering to vote in Multnomah County this past spring ... I got my King County ballot in the mail today, forwarded from Seattle.

I wondered if I'd screwed up--maybe I was supposed to tell King County to cancel my registration?

Nope: According to King County Elections' site, if I move out of state, I must "re-register to vote in your new state. Once registered there, that state will notify King County to cancel your old registration."

Not only did I re-register in another state six months ago, but I voted in the primary election here, back in May. So which county screwed up? Did Multnomah County fail to notify King County, or did King County not bother to clean up the voter rolls?
